Dear Supply Chain Partners:

Northrop Grumman Organizational Changes Effective Jan. 1, 2020

On Sept. 18, 2019 Northrop Grumman Corporation (NYSE: NOC) announced organizational changes to better align the company's broad portfolio to serve its customers' needs. There are four operating sectors – Aeronautics Systems, Defense Systems, Mission Systems and Space Systems.

Each sector is described as follows:

Aeronautics Systems, an innovative manned and unmanned air system provider, with a proven track record of systems engineering, manufacturing excellence and reliability

Defense Systems, a broad-spectrum provider of critical technology services, sustainment and modernization, including integrated battle command systems, directed energy, tactical weapons and information systems, focused on evolving threats and quick-turn requirements for a wide variety of national security, military and civilian customers

Mission Systems, a technology leader in open, cyber-secure, software-defined systems for defense and intelligence applications across multiple domains

Space Systems, a space and launch systems provider serving national security, civil and commercial customers

It is not expected that these changes will have any direct impact on existing agreements, but references to these new organizations may be seen in future correspondence.
